Subject: Microsoft Settlement Too Lenient

Dear Sir or Madam:

I was very disturbed to read about the extremely mild remedies that the Department of Justice has offered to settle the Microsoft anti-trust case.

The courts have found that Microsoft has a monopoly on operating system software and that Microsoft has used that monopoly unfairly to enrich itself in other markets. Extending its monopoly powers into other markets has chilled the competitive environment and damaged consumers by depriving them of the products and price-competition in these markets.

Please consider other, more severe, remedies for Microsoft's antitrust violations including breaking up the company into a separate organization for the operating system.

Thank you for your time and attention.
